PREFACE.

In the month of July, 1845, Mr. Stuart discovered at Panmure the original Register of the Bishoprick of Brechin, which was known to Dalrymple, Innes, and our first generation of antiquaries, but had escaped the notice of Macfarlane and the later collectors and transcribers (except General Hutton), so that its contents were in a manner new to the Scotch historical student. With the consent of the late Lord Panmure, Mr. Chalmers resolved to print this chartulary, as a second contribution to the Bannatyne Club, and he devoted his leisure for several years to collecting materials to illustrate it. His collections were scarcely completed at his death, and, unfortunately, no connected notice, nor even full notes of the results of his investigations, have been found among his papers. A few scattered memoranda and notes on the margins of his books seem to be all that remain to mark the progress of his inquiry; and thus, it is to be feared, his country, in his death, has lost the store of information he had treasured up by assiduous and most intelligent study, directed chiefly to the illustration of his own county and diocese.

Even the method and guiding principle of the present ample collection are only to be gathered from the materials themselves, which must go forth without that explanation of the author's design which would have covered these dead bones with a living light and interest.

VOL. I. The first volume consists of the contents of the Bishoprick Register itself. The original vellum MS. at Panmure is written, for the most part, in an uniform hand, not older than the end of the fifteenth century; the later entries coming down to the Reformation.

VOL. II. The second volume is an Appendix drawn from various quarters, and arranged according to the sources from which the materials were derived.

I. Brechin, p. 1-252. I. First stands a large selection from the charters and papers in the charter room of the City of Brechin.

II. Arbroath, p. 255-72. II. Secondly, charters of the ancient Bishops of Brechin recorded in the Register of the Abbey of Arbroath, concerning churches and property held by the monks in their Diocese.

III. Miscellaneous, viz. III. Miscellaneous charters from various repositories, public and private, consisting of—

1. Findowry, p. 273-97. 1. Papers from the charter chest of the Arbuthnots of Findowry, now represented by Mr. Carnegy Arbuthnott of Balnamoon.

2. Kinnaird, p. 298-302. 2. A few writs of the family of Carnegie of Kinnaird, now restored to its old honour, the Earldom of Southesk.

3. Dun, p. 303-9. 3. Papers from the charter chest of Dun, the ancient inheritance of the Erskines of Dun.

4. Carreston, p. 310-11. 4. Papers from Carreston, once hereditarily attached to the office which gave name to the family of Dempster, now the property of the Earl of Fife, through succession to the ancient family of Skene of that ilk.

5. A paper from the Ferne charter chest, the property of the Hon. William Maule. 5. Watterton, p. 312.

6. Documents from the charter room of the Burgh of Dundee. 6. Dundee, p. 314-7.

7. Notes of charters from the Register of the Great Seal of Scotland. 7. Great Seal p. 319-25.

8. Notes of writs entered in the Record of the Privy Seal of Scotland. 8. Privy Seal, p. 327-79.

9. A Crown gift of a benefice in the Cathedral, preserved in the charter chest of Sir John Mure Mackenzie of Delvin. 9. Delvin, p. 380.

10. Seven documents from various charter chests, of which the references have been lost. They appear to have been mostly taken from the charter rooms of the burghs of Montrose and Brechin. 10. E variis scriniis, p. 380-5.

11. Notes of Papal bulls and rescripts, from the "Monumenta Britannica" in the British Museum, an immense collection of Roman documents illustrative of British history, selected from the originals in the Vatican under the direction of the Papal Government, and presented to the British Government, in the present century. 11. Literæ papales, p. 387-416.

12. Rentals of the lay Lordship of Brechin, and of the Bishoprick, chiefly from the original accounts preserved among the national records in the General Register House at Edinburgh. 12. Rentals, p. 417-45.

From such various sources were collected the documents which Mr. Chalmers designed for the illustration of the history of his Diocese and its Cathedral of venerable antiquity.

Brechin was a seat of ecclesiastical institutions long before King David founded its Bishoprick. An ancient chronicle, speaking of Kenneth Mac Malcolm (who is supposed to have reigned about the end of the tenth century), says—Hic est qui tribuit magnam civitatem Brechne Domino.[1] Here, certainly, as in a few other places of Scotland, were preserved vestiges of that primæval Christian establishment which had fallen into strange laxity of life, and, perhaps, of doctrine, and was destined to give way altogether before the new and stricter rule introduced by Saint David. Among the few architectural relics of that early church, the Culdees of Brechin, like the Culdees of Abernethy, have left us one of those remarkable "round towers" which serve to perpetuate the memory of the Irish origin of the church which gave them birth.

We have charter evidence of a college of Culdees at Brechin existing before, and remaining for some time after, the erection of the Episcopal see. There is proof, indeed, that, upon its erection, the old Culdee convent and its Prior (submitting, it may be, to stricter rule of discipline), became, as perhaps in other cases, the electoral Chapter of the new Bishoprick. But the head of this Culdee convent, the Abbot of Brechin, had already become secularised, and had appropriated to himself, and transmitted to his family, the territories which his predecessors had administered for the church. During the reign of David I. this "impropriator" occurs, sometimes styled Leod of Brechin, sometimes Leod the Abbot, but still among the lay lords who accompanied the King, not ranked with the clerics.[1]

In the reign of William the Lion, we find Dovenald, Abbot of Brechin, granting lands to the monks of Arbroath, for the weal of his father Sampson. Dovenald is elsewhere styled the grandson of Leod; so it is probable that Sampson was son of Leod, and, perhaps, Abbot of Brechin. By this time, the office of Abbot had given a sort of surname to the family; and they still keep up their connection with the Culdees; for Maolbride, the Prior, witnesses the Abbot's grant to Arbroath;[2] and another Prior, Bricius, as still really a clerk, has precedence in a Bishop's charter, over Abbot Dovenald, now regarded as only a layman.[3]

In 1219 John was Abbot of Brechin,[4] and one of his charters is witnessed by Morgund and John his sons, and Malcolm his brother.[5]

With Morgund, who derived his surname from the family office, the race of the Abbots of the Culdees of Brechin disappears. The next personage who derived his style from Brechin, was Henry de Brechin, the son of David Earl of Huntingdon, in whose descendants the Lordship of Brechin (probably identical with the old lay Abbacy) remained till the Black Parliament of King Robert I.

The history of the successive Bishops of Brechin is very defective. Spottiswood threw into it his usual amount of errors, and Keith had not materials to correct them. It is the more to be regretted that a careful search has discovered no continuous work of Mr. Chalmers' on the subject. A few hasty notes on the margin of his 'Keith' are all that have been found to throw any light on it. With the help of these, the following list has been prepared, which, however imperfect, and in some places conjectural, is better than those hitherto published :—

The See founded c. 1150.

1. T. Bishop, c. 1155-6.

2. Sampon, c. 1158.

3. Turpin, elect 1178; was probably consecrated in that year, and may have been Bishop till 1198.

4. Ralph was elect in 1198; consecrated 1202.

5. His successor probably was Hugh, who styles Ralph his predecessor,[1] and who must have been Bishop of Brechin in 1214, since one of his charters is witnessed by Robert Elect of Ross, who was so designated in that year. Hugh died in 1218.

6. Gregory the archdeacon succeeded, who enumerates Turpin, Ralph, and Hugh, as his predecessors in the Bishoprick of Brechin He continued Bishop till 1246.

(Gilbert is said to have died Bishop of Brechin in 1249; succeeded by his Archdeacon Robert, perhaps through confusion of a former event in the See)[3]

7. In 1247, Pope Innocent IV. ordered the consecration of Albinus, formerly Precentor (?) of the Cathedral, who had been elected by the Chapter, Bishop of Brechin, dispensing with his illegitimacy.[1] Albinus enumerates as his predecessors Turpin, Ralph, Hugh, and Gregory. In 1248 Albinus witnessed, and had evidently promoted, the foundation of the Maison Dieu by William de Brechin, grandson of David, Earl of Huntingdon. Albinus, Bishop of Brechin, by charter dated at Finchale, in 1248, granted an indulgence to all who should help the building of the new church of the Priory of Finchale; and by a charter dated at Durham 4th March, 1256, a similar indulgence to those visiting any of the five altars in front of the Church of Durham.[2] He is known, also, from transactions with the Monks of Arbroath, and he died Bishop in 1269.[3]

8. The next steps are uncertain; but a chronicle, not of the highest authority,[4] has perhaps given the account most reconcilable with record. On the death of Albinus, William Dean of Brechin, a man of excellent character, but of a harsh voice, was elected by the Chapter. The Legate refused him confirmation, but on appeal the Pope at once granted it. William, elect of Brechin, died in 1274 in the Council at Lyons, and Friar William, of the Friars Preachers (Rector fratrum predicatorum de Perth),[5] was elected Bishop of Brechin, who refused the See on account of the smallness of the revenues.

[5] Chron. Melr.

(Keith, quoting the Chartulary of Arbroath, which he probably had not himself seen, states that Robert, formerly Archdeacon of this See, was Bishop thereof in the year 1284.)

9. William, Bishop of Brechin, granted an indulgence at Durham on 16th August, 1286; and William was Bishop in 1290.[1]

10. John de Kininmunth was Bishop of Brechin on 21 October, 1304. He was one of the Bishops, who, in 1309, recognised Robert Bruce's title to the crown. He is named as Bishop in 1313, 1318, 1321, and in the sixteenth year of the reign of Robert (1323). We do not learn when he died.

11. The next Bishop was Adam de Moravia, who filled the See from 1328 to 1349. Bishop Adam is mentioned by name in the passports for the Ambassadors to England in 1336, and again, among the Ambassadors treating of the ransom of David II., in 1347-8-9.[2] By a clerical error in our Register, a precept of David II., in the thirty-first of his reign (1359) is made to be directed to Adam, instead of Patrick, Bishop of Brechin, "Chancellor;" and on that authority Spottiswood has erroneously stated that Adam was chancellor of Scotland.

12. Philip was Bishop of Brechin on the 13th March, 1350.[3]

13. Patrick de Locrys, previously Rector of Tyningham, became Bishop of Brechin in 1354, and, about the same time, Chancellor of the Kingdom. He was Bishop and Chancellor from 1358 to 8 December, 1368; but was Bishop and no longer Chancellor on 4th April, 40th David II. (1369.)[1] On the morrow of the Holy Trinity, 1372, Bishop Patrick settled the constitution of the Chapter of his Cathedral,[2] and he was Bishop, and present in Parliament on the 4th April, 1373.

14. Stephen was Bishop of Brechin on the 23d February, 1384,[3] when he erected the Church of Lethnot into a prebend of the Cathedral.

15. Walter Forestar, Canon of Aberdeen, Secretary to the King, and Lord Clerk Register, got the Bishoprick of Brechin as early as 1401. On 16th July, 1420,[4] he assisted at a provincial synod and council general of the clergy of the kingdom held at Perth. In 1423 and 1424, Patrick, Bishop of Brechin, had passports from the King of England for returning from Flanders.[5]

16. John de Crannoch was Bishop of Brechin on Trinity Sunday the 22d day of May, 1429, when "Walter Stewart, knight, Palatyne of Stratherne, of Athole and of Cathenes erle, lorde of Brechyn and Cortequhy" made the munificent gift to the Church of an annual rent of £40 out of the lands of Cortoquhy.[6] Bishop John seems to have gone on more than one embassy to France for James I., besides accompanying the Scotch princess to her ill-omened marriage with the Dauphin.

On 14 April, 1434, in a general chapter held in the chapter house at Brechin, being the morrow after a Synod had sat, Bishop John narrated how upon the sea, in his last voyage from France, he had made a vow to give to the Church of Brechin, in honour of the Blessed Trinity, two silver candlesticks, weighing nine marks Troy, in acquittance of which vow he delivered to John Liall, the Treasurer of the Church, six silver cups, gilt on the edges, of the weight of nine marks Troy, in one case of red leather. Moreover, the Bishop delivered into the hands of the Treasurer a silver gilt cup and cover, of the weight of four marks Troy, the cover having the rays of the sun spread over it, in a leather case, to be preserved and kept in the treasury for the use of the Dean and Canons in their common symposia, and for no other use.[1] It is another scene of church life we find recorded in an entry of our Register on the 20th and 21st of August 1448. Bishop John is at war with the Dean about the tax that ought to have been levied upon the Canons, under the name of repairing the hoods of the choir. He fulminates excommunication against the Archdeacon for laying violent hands on his Lordship, and waxing still more wrath, admonishes the Dean, then present, to remove from his house his concubine, and to abstain from all cohabitation, or suspect conversation with her, under pain of £40 current Scotch money. John, Bishop of Brechin, was Conservator of the privileges of the Scotican Church in 1445; and John was still Bishop in 1450, and on 4 September, 1451.[1] The Auchinleck chronicle records that, in August, 1456, "decessit in Brechyne Master Jhone Crennok, Bischop of Brechyne, that wes callit a gud, actif, and vertuis man and all his tyme wele gouvernand."

17. George Schoriswod, previously Rector of Culter, Chancellor of Dunkeld, and one of the King's clerks, was Bishop of Brechin in 1454 (22 October) and, in the following year, became Chancellor of the Kingdom. He was Bishop of Brechin, and Chancellor of Scotland, 19 April, 1458. He seems to have held the See till 1462. In August, 1463, the See had been vacant for six months.

18. Patrick Graham, son to the Lord Graham, and uephew of James I., by his mother, Lady Mary Stewart, daughter to King Robert III., was Bishop of Brechin 2d January, the end of the year, 1463. In 1466, Patrick was translated to St. Andrews, where he became the first Archbishop.

19. John Balfour was the next Bishop. While yet only elect in November, 1465, Pope Paul granted him a dispensation to hold, in commendam, along with his Bishoprick, the parish church of Conveth (Laurencekirk), which he had held for nine years previously.[2] John was still Bishop of Brechin in 1477 and 1483.[3]

20. William Meldrum was made Bishop of Brechin in 1488-9, when we find him providing funds and taking account of expenditure for expeding his Bulls at the Papal Court; and he continued an unusual length of time in the See. William, Bishop of Brechin, granted a precept of seisin in favour of John Carnegy, dated 'apud locum seu maneriem nostrum de Ferne,' the 12th of August, 1512, which he states to be the 24th year of his consecration. During his long Episcopate he seems to have surrounded himself with relatives in the chapter. One of his charters is witnessed by William Meldrum, precentor, Thomas Meldrum, chancellor, John Meldrum, prebendary of Buthirgyll.[1]

21. John Hepburn was also Bishop for a very long period. He granted a precept of seisin to John Carnegy, apparent of Kynard, and Agnes Wod his wife, in the lands of Addecatt, dated 6 October, 1556 'and the 33d year of his consecration.'[2] If he was consecrated in 1523, he may have been designated or elect a short time previously. He died in August, 1558.[3]

22. His successor, and the last of the ante-Reformation Bishops, was Donald Campbell, the person well known as Abbot of Cupar, who, Leslie informs us, did not assume the title of Bishop. He was Privy Seal; and died in 1562.

23. John Sinclair, previously Dean of Restalrig, was "put into the See" by the Queen, after Donald's death. "He was blind of one eye, and zealous against the Reformers."[4] He died on the 9th April, 1566, "betuix thre and foure houris in the morning in James Mosmanis hous in Frosteris Wynd within Edinburgh"[5]

Mr. Chalmers has made no notes on the names and dates of Bishops after the Reformation, which it may be convenient to add here, chiefly from Keith—

1. Alexander Campbell, 1566, a son of Ardkinlas, appointed while yet a child, died in 1606.

2. Andrew Lamb, previously Minister at Bruntisland, Bishop of Brechin, 1606; translated to Galloway, 1619. "He was one of the three Bishops who went by the King's order into England, where he received Episcopal consecration, on the 20th October, 1610."

3. David Lindsay, son of Colonel John Lindsay, a brother of the house of Edzell, consecrated at St. Andrews, 23d November, 1619; translated to Edinburgh, 1634.

4. Thomas Sydserf, afterwards better known as Bishop of Galloway and Bishop of Orkney, was Bishop of Brechin in 1635, though omitted by Keith.[1]

5. Walter Whitford, son of James Whitford of that ilk, previously Minister of Monkland, and Sub-dean of Glasgow, then Rector of Moffat; made Bishop of Brechin, 1635. He retained his Sub-deanery in commendam. Deprived by the General Assembly in 1638: "after which he fled into England, as being reckoned a forward man for the Liturgy and Book of Canons; and there he died in the year 1643." Keith appears not to have known that, after the Glasgow Assembly, 1638, the King presented Bishop Whitford to the living of Waldegrave in Northamptonshire.[2]

[1] Bishop Forbes's Funerals. Edition 1845, p. 226. [2] Bridges' Northamptonshire, I., 284.

6. David Strachan, Parson of Fettercairn, was, upon the Restoration, (1660) promoted to the See of Brechin, and consecrated 1st June, 1662; died 1671. "He was preferred by the interest of the Earl of Middleton the Commissioner, his parishioner. He was buried in the Cathedral, before the pulpit."[1]

7. Robert Laurie, "a celebrated preacher, and a man of moderation," was made Dean of Edinburgh upon the Restoration, and afterwards promoted to the See of Brechin. "But the benefice of this Bishopric being small, he was allowed to retain his Deanry, and continued to exercise a particular ministry at the Church of the Holy Trinity in Edinburgh, till his death in 1677. "A man of a graceful person, and a popular preacher."

8. George Haliburton, previously Minister at Cupar Angus, consecrated Bishop of Brechin, 1678; translated to Aberdeen in 1682.

9 Robert Douglas, previously Dean of Glasgow, promoted to the Bishoprick of Brechin in 1682; translated to Dunblane, 1684.

10. Alexander Cairncross. This remarkable person was Bishop of Brechin only for a few months, having been translated to Glasgow in December, 1684. After the Revolution he was made Bishop of Raphoe by King William, and held the Bishoprick from 1693 to 1701—the only instance of such promotion after the abolition of Episcopacy in Scotland.

11. James Drummond, previously parson of Muthill, consecrated Bishop of Brechin in the Church of Holyrood, 25th December, 1684. Deprived at the Revolution, 1688, with the rest of his brethren. "He lived after this for the most part with the Earl of Errol, and he died in 1695, aged 66. It is to be said of this Prelate, that, though he had been promoted by the favour of his Chief, the Earl of Perth, then Chancellor of the Kingdom, yet he always showed himself as averse to Popery as any person in the Church; and, it is certain, there were but very few of the Bishops (if any at all) who favoured an alteration in religion." "He was a pious and good man, diligent in his office, and read the Scripture daily in the original tongues. After the Revolution, he suffered cheerfully, and retired to the Earl of Errol's house at Slains, where having lived four years, he died of a dropsy, (wherewith he had been long afflicted) aged about 70, 1695. He was buried in the isle of Cruden Church."[1]

For the names and succession of the Bishops subsequent to the Revolution I am indebted chiefly to the kindness of the present Bishop of Brechin.

12. John Falconer, 1709. "A good and grave man and very modest, tall, black, and stooping. He dyed at Englishmadie, July 6, 1723, and was buried at Pert."[2]

The Cathedral of Brechin was dedicated to the Holy Trinity. When we first become acquainted with the individuals composing the Chapter, the Culdees had long disappeared. Not even their name was preserved. The constitution of the Chapter was, however, though entirely secular, somewhat peculiar, and cannot be better described than in the words of the 'Declaratio,' 1372, which affords a remarkable contrast to the usual verbosity of such records. We find, says the Bishop and Ex-Chancellor of Scotland, that there are eleven benefices of old erected into Canonries in the Cathedral—of which four are Dignities—namely, those of the Dean, Precentor,[1] Chancellor, and Treasurer; the fifth, the office of the Archdeacon[2]—all five incompatible with other benefices. The other six benefices—those, namely, of the Vicar, the Pensioner, the Sub-Dean, with the prebends of Kilmoir, Butirgill, and Guthrie, we find to be simple prebends, and compatible with any other benefice, even with cure; and it is expressly declared that albeit two of the pre-

[2] The church of Strachan was the prebend of the Archdeacon. p. 134.

bendaries of the latter class are commonly named Vicar and Sub-Dean, yet they have no cure nor prerogative of dignity, nor office nor administration within the Cathedral nor without.[1]

Soon afterwards, the endowment by the Lord of Glenesk of another prebend with the church of Lethnot, made the whole number of canons twelve, without counting the Bishop.[2]

The church of Glenbervy also subsequently gave name to a prebend, but was, perhaps, united with some of those previously endowed; and finally, in 1474, the church and tithes of Futhnewyn[3] were erected into a canonry of the Cathedral by David, Earl of Crawford.

The Bishop sat in the Chapter as Rector of Brechin, that being his prebend. The Vicarius was, perhaps, so named from acting as the choral vicar of the Bishop. The Pensionarius had an annual rent from land, or pension, instead of church and tithes.

Touching the purely ecclesiastical portion of our materials—the selection of Papal letters, it is believed, is the first attempt to turn to use the large and valuable collection of copies of papers from the Vatican, made by permission of the Papal government, and now deposited in the British Museum. These here brought together give us insight into the system of jobbing, so early prevalent among churchmen, and show, among other things, the frequent and gradually increasing interference of the Popes with the patronage of all ecclesiastical benefices. The considerations which weighed at Rome are carefully set forth in the transaction with Guaspar Bonciani, a Florentine merchant and the correspondent of the great Roman bankers, Philip de Strozzi & Co., for procuring the promotion of William Meldrum to the Bishoprick in 1488.[1]

The dilapidation of church property upon the eve of the Reformation is more marked in Brechin than other dioceses. The Earl of Argyll procured his kinsman, Alexander Campbell, while yet a child, to be appointed to the Bishopric, with express power of "giving and disposing all the benefices which previously were in the Bishop's gift." How the boy Bishop was made to use that power is seen in the large alienations executed in 1566-7, apparently even before he had begun the education which we find him carrying on "in Geneva at the schuillis" in 1573.

The other charters of the period of the Reformation, while marking the rapid dilapidation of the Church property, are of great interest to the local antiquary, and furnish the chief means for tracing the history of the Episcopal city and its buildings. Unfortunately, the Round Tower of mysterious antiquity is not once mentioned. The anti-reformation clergy treated this solitary monument of the primæval church with the same neglect as their successors.[2]

The next buildings in order of time, in Brechin, are what remains of the Maison dieu, founded in 1264 by William of Brechin, son of the Lord Henry of Brechin, the son of Earl David, (the son of Prince Henry, the son of Saint David) and the Cathedral tower or campanile, built or repaired by Bishop Patrick between 1354 and 1373. The Bishop's palaces in Brechin, at Ferne, and at Farnel; the College—founded in the year 1429 by a mighty prince, Walter Stewart, son of King Robert II., Palatyne of Stratherne, Earl of Athol and of Caithness, (by marriage) Lord of Brechin and Cortoquhy, for four priests and six boys of the choir—the manses of the dignitaries and Canons, each with its garden attached, are frequently conveyed or described, and must, with a little study, be still easily identified. That pleasant labour, however, must be left to Mr. Black and Mr. Jervise; and it is fortunate that such antiquaries are to be found, where their service can be so usefully applied. It is no unworthy object to endeavour to throw round their city, which has almost forgotten its history, some of the interest of antiquity and historical association.

The learned Town-clerk will see reason to doubt his position, that "Brechin was a Royal Burgh in the twelfth century."[1] It was in the strictest sense an Episcopal city and burgh of Regality, subject in everything to the Bishop as long as there was one. It had, indeed, the privilege of trade, like many other burghs of the great Church lords, and, like several of them, it had the burden of sending Commissioners to Parliament.[1] But it did not become truly a Royal Burgh till 1695.

[1] History of Brechin, by David D. Black, town-clerk, p. 1. The first condition of a Royal Burgh is to hold immediately of the Sovereign. But Brechin held of the Bishop; and the Bishop, to the very last, presided in the Town Council. The charter of James III., 1488, asserts, indeed, that the city "is a free burgh, paying taxes and contributions as the other burghs;" but, while erroneously styling it "free," that charter gives no express freedom or privilege, nor creates it a Royal Burgh. The Charter of Charles I., 1641, was not apparently acted upon (like others of

Among the later charters of the collection are some curious notices of the impurity of the old town, which, it is hoped, will seem strange and incredible to the present generation.[2]

To some, the information which this collection affords respecting the early transmission of property, its various tenures, and the minute divisions and notes of boundary, may be more interesting than the antiquities of the Church. It was evidently at least as much in the view of the compiler. The most ancient of the rent-rolls or valuations here preserved, is the account of the lay Lordship of Brechin and the Garviach,[3] while forming part of the dowery of Mary of Guelders, the young widow of King James II., who bestowed a large part of their rents on her that period), nor even known, till brought forth to be made effective after the Revolution and the second downfall of Episcopacy. The Act of Parliament, 1695, which ratified it, declared Brechin a free Burgh Royal—reserving only the right of the Earls of Panmure, "of choising one of the Bailies of the said burgh, who shall be Constable and Justiciar therein, as use is." Next year, 1696, the Council elected Mr. Alexander Young the first Provost of the free Burgh Royal of Brechin.

[1] The Commissioner of Brechin appears in the sederunt of Parliament in 1478, 1481, &c. In 1693 Mr. Harry Maule of Kelly was Commissioner. By an order of the Town Council in May, 1700, the allowance by the Burgh to their Member was 30 shillings Scots for each day he is absent, detained in Parliament, besides horse-hire going and returning. Black, p. 121.

[2] It is the piece of land "lyand betuix the wall of our (the Bishop's) garding and the common calsay," which, in 1581, is described as ceno et stercorariis repleta, to such a foul degree that not only the citizens and inhabitants have caught distempers and sickness from the stench, "but even We cannot safely take the air in our pleasaunce and garden." (p. 217.) I have not met with so early a recognition of the unwholesomeness of filth, in Scotland.

[3] The early importance of the Castle of Brechin is proved by some entries in English records.

favourite foundation of the Trinity Church of Edinburgh; and one of the latest is the Taxt Roll of the County of Forfar divided into its four QUARTERS—of Dundee, of Kerrimure, of Brechin, and of Arbroath, as declared by Parliamentary Commissioners in 1614.[1]

A household or wardrobe account of Edward I. has the following payments—

To Gerard Dor and John de la Moille for sulphur for burning the Castle of Breghyn in August, 1303, iii s.

To Robert of Westminster for a wooden coffer delivered to John of Hauekele, clerk, for containing the charters, writings, and other memoranda found in the Castle of Breghin, 26 February, ii s. vj d.

The same record contains payments of £40 to a valet of the Queen, for his labour in the making of a war wolf (lupi guerre) for the storming of Stirling Castle wall, and £40 to John de la Muillie (valletto hospicii Regis) for his labour about making the Greek fire for burning the houses of the castle.

[1] I wish Mr. Chalmers had told us something more of the origin or antiquity, and the boundaries of these Quarters, each of which had its Mair or officer, to whom the Sheriff looked for executing his writs. Of the great Sheriffdom itself I find a few notes which, imperfect as they are, may be interesting to the gentry of the county.

One deed, the grant of a toft and croft in Kincardin,[1] with liberty of brewing and baking and of all else pertaining to a free hostellry, recalls the curious tenures that sometimes gathered round our Royal dwellings The Castle of Kincardin, an abode of our earlier monarchs, was surrounded by little tenements appropriated for the dwelling and support of the retainers of the court; and many of these retained the names of the officers whose appanage they were.[2] Another deed, a Crown charter of the Hermitage of Kilgerry,[3] opens a humbler piece of Angus local history. Hugh Cuminche was the Hermit, and possessed the hermitage of St. Mary's Chapel of the Forest of Kilgerry in the barony of Menmuir, by a heredita y title, together with the croft, the green, and three acres of arable land. These he resigned in the hands of the Sovereign, who regranted them to John Smyth, citizen of Brechin, on 12 May, 1445, for payment of services used and wont, and with a special reservation of the accustomed benefit of the Hermit's prayers. It does not appear that John Smyth was qualified to perform this part of the Reddendo, or to serve in the Forest Chapel of the Virgin; the ruins of which, till lately, existed in the vicinity of a fine spring, still known as the Lady Well.[4] The Brechin citizen sold the hermit-

[1] p. 384.

[2] The Fettercairn charter-chest shows several of these, so far as I can speak from memory, named after the pages and palfreymen, the tire-women, as well as the higher attendants on royalty. There were a few such tenures by menial service, in Brechin, which Mr. Chalmers ascribed to some ancient Royal occupation of the Castle. It is possible, however, that they derived their origin from the great Lords of Brechin, or even from the Bishops.

age and its pertinents to Somyr of Balyordie, who soon after had a Crown grant of half the Forest of Kilgerry, with vert and venison; Collace of Balnamoon having the other half;[1] and nothing more is heard of the Hermit of the Forest.

Feeling how imperfectly I have performed the last duty of an Editor, I cannot allow this contribution to the antiquities of Brechin and of Angus to be circulated without some notice of him who made the collection, and whose pleasure it would have been to illustrate it from his own rich stores of local learning.

The late Patrick Chalmers was born at Aldbar, on the 31st October, 1802. His father, though inheriting a good Scotch property, was engaged in extensive trade as a London merchant, and lived chiefly near London till 1819, when he came to reside permanently at Aldbar, where he died in 1826. Previous to 1819 Patrick was little in Scotland. He was educated partly at home and partly at the private school of Dr. Coghan, a good scholar and particularly esteemed a good Grecian, at Higham, two miles from his father's house at Walthamstow, a neighbourhood that permitted his spending his Saturdays and Sundays at home. Though Chalmers was long remembered by Dr. Coghan as a promising pupil, he brought away from school a very slender amount of classical scholarship, and hardly increased it during his residence at [1] Original charters at Kinnaird, and in Lord Fife's charter-chest. Papers in the case of the Dukedom of Montrose, 1850-3.

Oxford. He was entered at Queen's College when sixteen, but did not reside long enough to take a degree; and was gazetted to a cornetcy in the Third Dragoon Guards in the autumn of 1821. Most of his military life was spent in Ireland. He attained the rank of Captain, but retired from service shortly after his father's death, and then settled at Aldbar.

Chalmers's first phasis of country life was as a sportsman. He kept a pack of fox-hounds, and after the first season was his own huntsman—an office which he filled with good repute, but which subjected him to fatigue and exposure, that probably had an injurious effect on his constitution. The death of a young lady to whom he was engaged, in 1830, affected him deeply, and this shock, together with an attack of illness, led him to give up his hounds. The country was now agitated with the great question of Parliamentary Reform; and Chalmers, long ere this thoroughly liberal in politics, threw himself into the struggle with the same zeal and energy he had shown as a sportsman. After a gallant but unsuccessful contest in 1832,[1] he was elected in 1834 without opposition, as Member for the Montrose District of burghs, and was again returned for the same constituency at the next general election. As soon as he had taken his seat in the House, he devoted himself to the study of

[1] His address to the electors, referring to the then exciting topics of the East India Charter, the Corn Laws, Slave Trade, Tithes, ran thus—"These subjects, however, cannot be satisfactorily discussed within the limits of an address to electors, nor do I think an honest man can pledge himself to the particular course he will pursue on any of them. But, though I will not pledge myself to details, I may say, with truth, that I have long desired to see a considerable change in the laws relating to these subjects, and that I am an enemy to monopolies, and to slavery in every shape."

its history and forms, his duty in Parliament and in committees, and to the local interests of his constituents, with indefatigable industry, and with an honesty of purpose which his stoutest opponents never questioned. There was no local public improvement in which he did not bear a leading part; and his constituents appreciated the enlightened interest he took in all their affairs. His services to the Burghs he represented were acknowledged by repeated public expressions of their approbation. It was not forgotten that he maintained the principles of freedom before they had become fashionable; and the feeling of regret when failing health compelled him to retire from Parliament was deep and universal.

In July, 1839, Chalmers married Jessie Anna Letitia, the younger of two daughters of John Herbert Foley of Ridgway, Pembrokeshire, and widow of Thomas Taylor Vernon of Hanbury Hall, Worcestershire. In less than a year, on the 7th April, 1840, that lady died, leaving two sons by her first husband. In addition to the sorrow of so untimely a bereavement, Chalmers's parliamentary attendance was now frequently interrupted by attacks of illness, and a chronic malady which never afterwards entirely quitted him. About the close of the session of 1841, he was advised to retire to Aldbar, and to seek, in complete repose, a cure for a threatening of spine disease; and, in spring of 1842, he gave up his seat in the House of Commons, and his active political life; though he never ceased to feel and express the heartiest interest on political questions, and was always ready with advice and sympathy, as well as more material assistance, for any measure tending to the general good, or the interest of his district.

For the next nine years Chalmers was constantly in ill health. Riding and walking were alike impossible for him. Even in summer he could only at times take the air in a carriage. In winter, he was entirely confined to the house. Often in pain, always under the depression of a wearing malady, cut off from society as well as from all the pursuits that at different times had occupied him, he had to seek for new employment for his active mind, suited to his altered circumstances. He found it in the study of the charter history and antiquities of his native county; and he bestowed on that study the same energy he had thrown into every pursuit, and the most admirable and persevering industry.

He had to work from the foundation — to recover his school Latin, and to add to it the Latin of the middle ages— to learn the handwriting of old charters, and the more cramp hand of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries — to pick up enough of Law to understand the terms of a tenure—to study the constitution of old Scotland and that of the ancient Church, which is at the root of historical antiquities—to be able to apply the criteria for dates. His first difficulty, as with all self-educated scholars, was to find the apparatus for work—sources of information. When he began the study, his library consisted mostly of his grandfather's books, who had been a lawyer and Sheriff of the county. There was plenty of old Scotch Law, and a good deal of general literature, but of the peculiar books of his new study, hardly any. He had to furnish himself with the dictionaries and grammars of a new language and science, and that at a distance from advice, as well as from booksellers' shops. But these difficulties were, with Chalmers, only incitements to persevere. In a short time he gathered round him a capital archæological library, to which he was continually adding, and which in no long time he knew well how to turn to use. He corresponded, and became personally acquainted with most students of his country engaged in similar pursuits, and his acquaintances soon became friends. He stood very well with his country neighbours, and he used his popularity for obtaining access to every charter-room in his county, and made notes of all. His house became the pleasant haunt of many an antiquary and scholar, giving and taking knowledge. This was so, even when his thread of life seemed worn to a fibre; but, before the end of the nine years of habitual sickness, though still restricted to his own house, he had, in some measure, recovered strength and the power of locomotion, and was able to enjoy a more general intercourse.

Aldbar was then the centre of a very cultivated society. Along with country neighbours and English friends were to be found Scotchmen of his own pursuits, foreign antiquaries, artists, and scholars. All men of education or accomplishment were welcome; for he could appreciate intellect, however directed, and merit in any dress. His reputation as a local antiquary brought round him and imbued with his tastes, neighbours who had never dreamt of antiquities before,—the Laird curious about a family picture or pedigree, the Parson desirous of information as to teind or glebe.

His stores of information were open alike to all. If he could not solve the difficulty, he could advise where to seek for its solution. His own labour was given freely, and his large collections and books of reference were as much for his friends as for his own use. He devoted a good deal of time to preparing two works as contributions to the Bannatyne Club—one, a magnificent collection of the Ancient Sculptured Stones of Angus, those monuments full of mysterious symbols, and of unknown antiquity—the other, the present Register. He assisted largely in editing the Chartulary of Arbroath, and contributed smaller essays to various Antiquarian Societies and Repertories. Through all these occupations he kept up a very extensive correspondence with fellow-workmen, and knew whatever was drawing the attention of Antiquaries in all parts of the world.

Even before he had turned his mind to these studies, he had found occupation for hours of sickness in the improvement of his family estate. He was proud of his picturesque old castle, the structure of Sir Thomas Lyon of the sixteenth century, and delighted in embellishing it, and the quaint garden with which he surrounded it. He was a liberal and considerate landlord, and an enterprising improver, regarding his tenants' advantage as his own. For his greater operations he chose times of rural stagnation, when his employment was a boon to the labourer. He established schools, promoted cleanliness and comfort among his poor neighbours; and during his long illness he never ceased to take the most lively interest in county business. None of these objects were overshadowed by his literary pursuits; on the contrary, he pursued them with a more intelligent taste, and on higher principles.

At length, after nine years of sickness and seclusion, Chalmers's constitution rallied, and he was gradually restored to comparative health. This naturally produced a change of his habits. He gave somewhat less of his thoughts to antiquarian studies and literature, and devoted more time to public and county business. Among other objects of more immediate interest, he applied his sound intellect and the business habits he had acquired in his parliamentary life, to working out a system of road reform; on which subject he prepared a valuable report, as Convener of a committee of the County appointed to consider the consolidation of road districts, in 1851. After that year his health steadily improved, and admitted of his occasionally leaving home, and of visits to Edinburgh and London every season. It was delightful to witness his enjoyment in returning into society, and in using the sources of information he had so long wished to reach. There appeared in him so much vigour and freshness that his friends indulged in the hope of his entire recovery and long life. It was not, however, without misgiving that they heard him announce his intention of making a tour on the continent, in company with his step-son, in the Spring of 1854.

Chalmers left England in high spirits; and his travels through France and Italy gave him great pleasure. To compare the condition of the people, their agriculture and habits of life, interested him no less than the study of their history and antiquities. The route of the travellers was down the Rhone to its mouth, and by steam to Genoa, Leghorn, and Rome. On their arrival at Rome, in the middle of March, Chalmers was attacked by small-pox, but made a rapid recovery, and spent some time in diligent study of the language, as well as the antiquities of the city, so interesting to an antiquary.

In May, he went to Naples, and, while there, had some alarming symptoms of his old malady. He was advised to leave Naples, and imprudently undertook the journey back to Rome by land. His complaint was aggravated by the exertion, and he arrived in a state of great exhaustion, from which he never recovered. He survived only a few days, and died at Rome, on the 23d of June, 1854. His remains were brought home, and the body of Patrick Chalmers is buried beside his father and mother in the cemetery of the little chapel in the glen, which was of old the parish church of Aldbar, and which he had taken great pleasure in restoring and rebuilding, chiefly with the stones of the ruined church.

His untimely death is deplored by the antiquaries and scholars of Scotland, and not by them only. If there be anywhere a belief that the cultivation of such studies as his, unfits a man for the real business of life, his course of energetic and practical usefulness should go far to remove it. In the circle of his own connections, among his friends and in society, he was much beloved. He was an exemplary landlord and country gentleman, while he did something to raise the standard of refinement among the rural aristocracy. As a politician, an economist and statist, a promoter of social improvement, he held a high place. Through life he was an earnest supporter of those principles which, though they now form part of our constitution, had few advocates among country gentlemen when he began his career. He was a zealous friend to the cause of education, yet entirely free from sectarian bias. To every public and patriotic movement within the sphere of his influence his support was given with unfailing constancy. In his own district his death was felt to be a great public calamity, and all who take an interest in his native county of Angus will long lament the loss of Patrick Chalmers.

Donacio capellaniarum de Dwnne.

13 Uniuersis tam posteris quam presentibus presentes literas inspecturis Robertus de Erskyne dominus eiusdem et baronie de Dwn salutem in Domino sempiternam. Nouerit uniuersitas vestra quod ego pro salute anime mee et animarum parentum et amicorum meorum infeodauerim per cartam et a domino nostro rege ego procurauerim confirmari duos capellanos celebrantes et imperpetuum celebraturos ad altare beate Marie Virginis in cathedrali ecclesia Brechinensi in tota illa proparte baronie de Dunde tam infra burgum quam extra tam in annuo redditu quam terra. Quamquidem propartem baronie dictus dominus noster rex michi pro me heredibus meis et assignatis quibuscumque etiam ad manum mortuam concessit hereditarie et donauit. Cumque tamen dicte baronie propartis predicte liberum tenementum ad mulierem ingenuam dominam Johannam comitissam de Strathne [Stratherne] pro ecce [vite ?] sue tempore debeat pertinere volens ut prefati capellani sint etiam medio tempore tam strate quam prompte de suis salariis deseruiti. Obligo me et heredes meos ac totam baroniam meam de Dwne antedictam ad soluendum capellanis predictis annuatim apud Brechine per duas portiones equales ad festa scilicet natalis Domini et natiuitatis beati Johannis Baptiste decem libras sterlingorum de firmis dicte baronie de Dwn per manus balliui euisdem per totum ipsum tempus quo prefata propars baronie de Dwne fuerit per comitissam predictam modo quo premittitur occupata. Qua vero occupatione cessante prefati capellani tenore predicte infeodationis sue propartis baronie predicte in cuius feodo exnunc etiam sint saisiti se tenebunt per omnia et firmiter imperpetuum adherebunt presenti penitus conuentione relicta. Et subicio me et heredes meos totam terram meam de Dwn antedictam jurisdictioni domini episcopi Brechinensis et officiali eiusdem qui pro tempore fuerit in hoc casu ut possint me heredesque meos ad prefatam solucionem faciendam tempore durante predicto per censuram ecclesiasticam cohercere. In cuius rei testimonium sigillum meum presentibus apposui. Datum apud Edinburgh decimo octauo die mensis Nouembris anno Domini millesimo trecentesimo sexagesimo.

* Carta Roberti de Erskyne de duabus capellaniis etc.

14 Omnibus hoc scriptum visuris vel audituris . Robertus de Erskyne dominus eiusdem et baronie de Dun salutem in domino sempiternam . Noueritis me de et cum consensu et assensu ac licentia speciali excellentissimi principis et domini mei domini Dauid Dei gratia Regis Scottorum illustris pro salute anime mee et anime Cristiane de Keith sponse mee et anime quondam Beatricis coniugis mee. Necnon et pro salute animarum patris mei et matris mee omniumque fidelium defunctorum dedisse concessisse et hiis literis imperpetuum confirmasse duobus capellanis diuina celebrantibus et imperpetuum celebraturis pro salubri statu mei et meorum heredum dum vixerimus et pro anima mea et animabus ipsorum cum nos migrare contigerit ab hac luce atque pro animabus parentum meorum et omnium predictorum ad altare beate Marie Virginis in ecclesia Cathedrali Brechinensi totam illam propartem baronie de Dunde tam infra burgum quam extra tam in annuo redditu quam in terra concessam michi heredibus meis et assignatis quibuscumque eciam mortue manui per dominum nostrum regem antedictum sicut patet per suam cartam michi inde confectam. Tenendam et habendam eisdem capellanis imperpetuum computando videlicet annuum redditum in burgo de Dunde pro decem marcis sterlingorum. Et terciam partem terre de Petkerach pro quinque marcis annuatim juxta ipsius assedationem factam seu fieri solitam annis communibus adeo libere plene integre et honorifice sicut aliquis comes vel baro regni Scocie aliquam elimosinam aliquibus capellanis potest concedere seu donare. Et in casu quo dicta tercia pars terre de Petkerach per dictos capellanos mediante auxilio mei vel meorum heredum siue balliui nostri baronie de Dun ad summam quinque marcarum extendi seu assedari non valeat. Volo et obligo me et heredes meos ad supplendum de firmis meis dicte baronie de Dun proporcionaliter ad duos anni terminos annuatim dictis capellanis quicquid eis deficerit de summa quinque marcarum predictarum in dicta terra de Petkerach. Preterea volo quod dicti capellani intersint communiter omnibus diuinis seruiciis in prefata ecclesia celebrandis videlicet missis matutinis vesperis et aliis horis canonicis sicut et stallarii alii dicte ecclesie interesse tenentur et in habitu consimili cum eisdem. Ita tamen quod iidem capellani non fiant ebdomadarii in dicta ecclesia nec arceantur ad missam aliquam celebrandum in ipsa ecclesia aut extra preterquam ad dicendum missas suas ad prefatum altare beate Marie sicut supra. Volo eciam quod quandocunque et quotienscunque contigerit dictos capellanos vel eorum alterum in fata decedere vel discedere aut ex causa rationabili amoueri ipsorum seu ipsius presentatio ad me et heredes meos pure pertineat imperpetuum. Et si per unum mensem a tempore vacationis ydoneum vel ydoneos capellanum vel capellanos ad supra dicta seruicia domino episcopo Brechinensi vel decano et capitulo eiusdem sede vacante non presentauero seu non presentauerint ex tunc liceat dicto domino episcopo aut decano et capitulo sede vacante ydoneos vel ydoneum capellanos vel capellanum pro tunc in eisdem officiis ordinare jure presentationis penes me et heredes meos simpliciter alias sicut premittitur nichilominus remanente In cuius Rei testimonium sigillum meum presentibus apposui. Datum apud Edinburgh decimo octauo die Nouembris anno Domini millesimo trecentesimo sexagesimo.
